Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The cultural heritage value of 255 Lamond Street lies in its historical value and its contextual value.

Historical or Associative Value

The Pierpoint Fly Fishing Nature Reserve has direct associations with Richard Pierpoint who was designated a National Historic Person by Parks Canada in recognition of his life experience, hardships, and contributions as a Black Loyalist in Upper Canada. A former enslaved person, Richard Pierpoint was granted the east half of Lot 6, Concession 1 in 1822, including the lands which now form the subject property, for his military service as part of the War of 1812, fulfilling his settlement duties despite his advanced age. His property has been identified as a stopping point, a place of rest and refuge, for Black individuals and families on their own journey to set down roots in what was known as the Queen’s Bush to the north, along the Garafraxa Road. Richard Pierpoint and his property in what is now Fergus is part of the larger story of waves of Black settlement and displacement in Upper Canada in the late eighteenth and early to mid-nineteenth century. The subject property has direct associations with historical themes determined to be important to the development of the Township of Centre Wellington. The Pierpoint Fly Fishing Nature Reserve is part of the long history of environmental conservation efforts in Centre Wellington and has developed into a site of commemoration, recreation, stewardship, and community development.

As part of Richard Pierpoint’s land grant, the property has the potential to yield information that contributes to an understanding of early Black land ownership, settlement, and displacement in Upper Canada in the late eighteenth and early to mid-nineteenth century.

Contextual Value

The Pierpoint Fly Fishing Nature Reserve is important in defining, maintaining, and supporting the character of the upper section of the Grand River in the Township of Centre Wellington as a popular fly-fishing destination, providing free access to fly fishers and others to appreciate the natural heritage of the Grand River, a Canadian Heritage River. It is physically, visually, and historically linked the to the Grand River.

The property is historically linked to one of the travel routes used by early Black individuals and families in their journey north to the Queen’s Bush in the 1820s and 1830s. It is considered a landmark for different reasons. It is a well-known public access point for fly fishers along this stretch of the Grand River, a popular fly-fishing destination. The nature reserve, which is also locally referred to as Pierpoint Park, is also highlighted as stop on the “Wellington County: Black Heritage Reclaimed Driving Map” as a place of significance to the historical Black community in Wellington County.
